Students rally for safety

Genell Pavelich
The BG News

Recent violent attacks on campus have led students and administrators to deal with the issue of safety in Bowling Green.

A rally took place Monday in front of Williams Hall addressing this issue.

Kristin McKeown, member of Womyn for Womyn who helped plan the rally, said it was important to bring people together to do something about the violence on campus.

"We wanted to create one united voice against violence on campus," she said.

Many speakers addressed the students and an information table was set up to provide students with pamphlets and handouts about the issues.

Speakers included Barbara Hoffman, chairwoman for the Coalition Against Sexual Offenses; Kara Jennings, program assistant for the Victims Advocacy Program at the Link; Sara Ogdahl, city council First Ward candidate; Sallie Stiens, member of the student safety patrol; and Emily Cooperider, member of the Campus Safety Task Force.

Hoffman said CASO is an organization of students, faculty and staff that educates and helps victims of violence.

"Many people are concerned with what has been happening on this campus recently," she said. "It is important to become more aware to help prevent more from happening in the future."

Jennings also said victims need to be aware where they can turn for help, including the Link.

"We work for and with victims of rape," she said. "By empowering them with information, victims can begin to gain back control," she said.

Students listen as Sallie Stiens, senior political science major, speaks up at the rally on rape on campus. The rally took place on Monday afternoon.

Ogdahl agreed it is important to promote awareness of the recent violent acts that occurred on campus.

"You as an individual need to take measures to protect yourself," she said. "You need to be aware because you can't afford to remain silent."

Stiens said there are many things students can do to be safer including not walking alone and being alert of their surroundings.

"We can make changes, but we need the support of the administration and students to provide a viable front against violence," she said.

Cooperider said people are beginning to realize that they need to do something and the rally was an example of taking action.

"This is a time for everyone to get involved because safety is everyone's business," she said.

Stiens also said it is important for students to talk to Undergraduate Student Government representatives about what can be done on campus to improve safety including lighting. Members of USG walked around campus last week conducting a safety audit of the safety problems on campus that could be improved, including the lighting situation.

Randy Gardner, state representative, said he is proposing that more state money in the budget be spent for campus safety and lighting.

"Essentially, there is not a more public place in Wood County than the University," he said. "Safety is obviously a priority at the campus and more needs to be done to improve it."

Ogdahl said the purpose of the rally was to create a visual awareness for students that they can do something to help with safety.

"We need to encourage awareness and actively channel our fear and anger into some response," she said. "We need to let people know that this is our home and that we should be the ones helping propose solutions to make it safer."

John Miller, city council First Ward candidate, agreed that safety is an important issue.

Road repairs on Thurstin creep along

Thurstin Avenue construction and proposals to close three railroad crossings were the key topics during the Bowling Green City Council meeting Monday night.

According to Public Works Director Bill Blair, the completion date of the Thurstin Avenue project is still indefinite.

"The project is not a city of Bowling Green project," Blair said. "The project is benefiting the city, yet, federal funds are being administered through the Ohio Department of Transportation."

ODOT is providing the inspections and are working with the contractors, he said.

"We have met with the workers and the contractors throughout the project," Blair said. "We have been encouraged to stop by the construction site and we have. The project is out of the city's control."

Blair said that it was not up to the city to enforce deadlines.

"I have passed the dates for the deadline along," Blair said. "However, they have not been lived up to."

In addition, the issue of the concrete being installed at a later date was a concern of the City Council members.

According to Blair, a city of Bowling Green ordinance says that no concrete should be poured after Nov. 15, unless approved by the city engineer.

"It takes concrete about five to seven days to cure," he said. "The state enforces precautions. However, the state may

The BG News

According to University police, a resident of McDonald Hall was raped in Founders last Wednesday night.

According to the police report, Gerry Muir, McDonald West hall director, told police that the woman was raped between midnight and 5 a.m.

Muir also told police the victim was with an advocate from the Link and was being taken to Wood County Hospital.

This is still under investigation by campus police.

Freshman dies from apparent heart problems

A freshman computer science major died of apparent heart problems in Rossford, Ohio, Friday night.

Jeffrey Zappitelli, 18, of Bowling Green, was in the parking lot of The Pharm where officers observed him screaming obscenities.

According to police reports, the Rossford officer tried to "find out what was wrong" with Zappitelli, at which point he told the officer he was "tripping on LSD." The officer then tried to handcuff him, at which point Zappitelli ripped the microphone off the officer's radio.

Zappitelli was transported to Mercy Hospital, where he reportedly went into "full arrest" at 10:52 p.m.

Zappitelli worked at Student Book Exchange, 530 East Wooster St., where co-workers said they remember him as "a character."

"I was working with him on a Netscape program," Dean Converse said. "I considered him a computer genius. He was a good guy -- a real character. I'm going to miss having him around."

Jeff McIntire, a junior education major, was friend of Zappitelli's.

World leaders salute Rabin

Hilary Appelman
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM -- A shaken world said its goodbyes to Yitzhak Rabin in a sun-washed pine grove Monday, laying him to rest with the praise of presidents and the tears of a granddaughter.

The host of world leaders attending his funeral at Mount Herzl cemetery was testimony to the authority of the slain prime minister, a warrior who looked beyond his years on the battlefield to make peace with some of Israel's most intractable enemies.

The dozens of dignitaries from the Arab world who put aside their most fundamental differences with Israel to attend his funeral proved how radically Rabin helped change the face of the Middle East.

King Hussein came from Jordan to urge other Arab countries to take the road to peace. President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt also made his first visit to Jerusalem under Israeli rule, as did ministers from Morocco, Oman and Qatar, countries without ties to Israel.

In a stunned Israel, Jews were still trying to digest the ugly fact that one of their own -- a right-wing extremist opposed to Rabin's peacemaking with the Palestinians -- had shot him to death at a peace rally.

Arabian dignitaries set aside differences to attend funeral

In a day of tears and raw emotion, Rabin's successor, Shimon Peres, saw a gleam of hope in the gathering of world leaders.

"This is the crowning glory of your efforts, all of us here together," Peres said. "The man who murdered you will not be able to murder the idea that you carried."

"Farewell to you my elder brother, the bringer of peace."

Rabin's freckle-faced granddaughter, 17-year-old Noa Ben-Artzi, touched the hearts of those who heard her moving remembrance of a gentle man, a "private hero" not visible to the outside world.

"Ones greater than I have eulogized you, but none knew the softness of your caress as I, or that half-smile of yours that always said everything, the smile that is no longer there," said the weeping, auburn-haired young woman. "You were, and still are, our own private hero."

Leaving the podium in tears, she was comforted by her brother, Yonatan, dressed in an paratrooper's uniform and red beret.

In a region fumbling for direction, the Arabs' presence at the funeral was a powerful gesture of acceptance towards Israel. They put aside their differences over the disputed city of Jerusalem -- the most sensitive issue on the Arab-Israeli agenda -- to pay respects to a fallen peacemaker.

"I had to pinch myself to believe what I am seeing," said government spokesman Uri Dromi, noting the Arab robes and headdresses that dotted the rows of dignitaries.

King Hussein forged a strong bond with Rabin in decades of secret and open negotiations that culminated in a peace treaty between Jordan and Israel last year.

"You lived as a soldier, you died as a soldier for peace," said Hussein, who wore a red-and-white checkered Arab headdress. "I believe it is time for all of us to come out openly and to speak of peace."

Rabin, who led Israel to triumphs on the battlefield, then stretched out a hand of peace to his Arab neighbors, was buried with full military honors in a pine glade atop a hill overlooking the volatile city where he was born 73 years ago.

His widow Leah, sitting in the first row, wept through much of the ceremony, supported by her son, Yuval, her daughter, Dalia, and her grandchildren Noa and Yonatan.

"Farewell to you my elder brother, the bringer of peace."

Shimon Peres
Rabin's successor

Only once did a smile cross her face, when President Clinton affectionately recalled how Rabin, never one for formality, had come to a black-tie dinner in Washington without the black tie.

Clinton called Rabin "a martyr for peace but ... a victim of hate."

FBI plays 'taps' to private lines

There are numerous things citizens of this country value, the most well-known being life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Another right many people take for granted is the right to privacy.

We like to believe what goes on beyond closed doors, provided it is not illegal, is nobody's business but our own. We also live in a world where the fear of government intrusion and manipulation is at an all-time high.

Unfortunately, anti-government paranoia is not just imagined evil-doing -- there is evidence in the past that when the government has been given too much power it has abused it.

Of all the government organizations, perhaps none has a shadier reputation for violating people's privacy than the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

While under the command of J. Edgar Hoover, the bureau violated the privacy of hundreds of thousands of individuals in order to assemble files on anyone Hoover believed was a threat to the United States.

With these files Hoover smeared the leaders of the Civil Rights Movement, manipulated the media and blackmailed people who disagreed with him.

Hoover was able to do all this without fear of reprisal for the 48 years he ran the FBI. Only after his death was his abuse of power discovered.

Now the FBI is requesting congressional approval of a national wiretapping program that would give law enforcement officials the capacity to monitor simultaneously as many as one out of every 100 phone lines in some areas of the country.

Such a surveillance ability would vastly exceed the current needs of law enforcement. Recently, there have been less than 850 court approved wiretaps per year.

While domestic terrorism is on the rise, there are still significant questions about whether the FBI needs this much wiretapping ability.

Given the organization's less-than-stellar past, one must also wonder if the FBI wants this increased capability for purely noble reasons. Perhaps the FBI does have a significant and noble reason for asking for this. But so far the FBI has not explained what that reason is.

The right to privacy is an assumed right. The Constitution does not expressly guarantee it. But numerous courts at both the state and federal level have said that individuals do have it.

The News believes that the FBI should be very clear about what it plans to do with this increased surveillance system. If it cannot explain why it needs the wiretapping capability, Congress should refuse to fund it.

THE BUDGET-CUTTING COMPETITION

Education needs refining

According to most of what I've read, the quality of American education today is pitiful. Many educators have said that it isn't likely to get better anytime soon. As graduation draws near I've been thinking about my experiences at this institution and the truly great professors I've had. I can list three.

When I registered for summer classes back in 1992, I decided to knock off a few pesky general ed requirements. One of them was psychology. I had a passing interest in the subject, but I had not done well in my high school psychology class and was a little apprehensive. On the first day of class I looked about the room, which was packed.

In walked Don Ragusa, an energetic man with scholarly glasses, a gray beard, and a cultivated voice. He spent the first 30 minutes talking about the way he planned to run the class, and then, since time was short, he launched into a lecture on neurons and the chemicals of the brain. This is probably the least interesting aspect to beginning psychology, but the students were very attentive. By the end of the first week I could tell that this was going to be the best class I had ever taken.

Ragusa was so fascinated by the subject that he was able to create an energy in the room that sometimes held the students spellbound. He would tell us about great psychologists of the past, and unusual characters he admired, such as Igaz Moniz, Carl Rogers and Winston Churchill.

Ragusa's lectures were often filled with stories about such people, in addition to famous psychological experiments and theories. The classes were extremely difficult, but they were always fascinating. Proof of this was the fact that Ragusa never took attendance, and yet absenteeism was rare.

Roark D. Littlefield

Later on in my educational career I signed up for a Shakespeare class. The professor was Robert Bashore, whom everyone called Dr. Bob. This man would get positively giddy while leading class discussions on Shakespeare's plays, and his love for the works was infectious. The classroom discussions often consisted of staging major scenes and examining the themes.

Dr. Bob took the entire class to the Stratford Shakespeare Festival so that we could see world class productions of these plays. Sometimes we would gather at his home to see video tapes of other productions. When we left his class at the end of the semester each one of us had a genuine insight into this playwright, whom many feel is the best the world has ever known.

Dr. Bob felt as though Shakespeare's greatness deserved this kind of attention. Unfortunately Dr. Bob has since retired, but he made a lasting impression on a great many people, and quite possibly changed a few lives.

The other great teacher I've had is one of the most famous here at the University, R.K. Tucker. For those unfortunate students who haven't had the R.K. experience, let me take a few lines to describe it.

To my knowledge, Tucker's assertiveness class is not required for any major here at the University, yet more than 200 students register each time it is offered. When I took the class, Tucker stunned us on the first day with the most rigid attendance policy any of us had ever seen. He announced that once he had started talking, no one was to enter the room. He let us know that he was serious about this class, and if we weren't we had better drop right away. Several students did, to their disadvantage. R.K. lectured on how to win at life. He told us the rights we had as human beings, and he taught us that society often doesn't want us to have these rights. He told us how to deal with the many difficult and sick people in this world, and he instructed us on how to avoid dysfunction in our lives.

Toward the end of the semester he focused on assertiveness in sexual and romantic relationships, and on the last day of class everyone stood up and rewarded him with an ovation of deafening applause.

These three University professors are exceptional. They had no patience for mediocrity, and they didn't allow it of their students or of themselves. They had the power to organize and teach their classes without being tied down by University policies and departmental bureaucracy. Teaching is what these men were made for, and while in their classes I could see the genuine pride they took when they faced their students each day. They loved us and they loved their subjects.

Unfortunately these professors are few and far between. Too many University professors and instructors take it for granted that they are going to bore students. Some of them even make jokes about it, telling students to set their watch alarms so they can wake up when class is over.

Other classes are so "organized" by their departments that teachers' creativity is stifled. One class I took had an entire textbook hundreds of pages thick that was simply used to organize the absurd amount of course policies and red tape. Of course, this textbook was required.

Like most graduates and undergraduates I've had genuinely terrible teachers who don't seem to care that we students are shell-ing out fistloads of green for the privilege of taking their classes. Professors often look as though they are simply killing time while waiting to retire. This is the greatest problem facing the University.

Holocaust repeated in Bosnia

With the Presidential candidates gearing up for the next election, they all seem to be sharpening their respective issue sights. A hot topic for the hopefuls (and also a large issue in the '92 election) is what to do about the situation in the former Yugoslavia.

It has come to my attention that many students (and the public in general) are painfully unaware of the situation in the Balkans. A general discourse seems to be, "We have so many problems here, why are we worried about what's happening over there?"

I agree that sometimes certain U.S. political figures need to look more inward rather than being so gung ho on foreign affairs. But, the situation in the former Yugoslav republics is one that we cannot, with any regard to humanitarianism, ignore.

This is Holocaust Education Week. "Learn now, so that history will never repeat itself" is the slogan. Unfortunately, this history is repeating itself in Europe. Instead of happening in Germany against the Jewish, however, it is happening in Bosnia against the Muslims.

The problems in former Yugoslavia are highly complex and not easy to understand. I will try my best to communicate my understanding of the situation.

The problems with ethnic unrest, apparently, date back for centuries. Civil war broke out in the summer of 1991, only weeks after the republic of Croatia declared its wish for independence.

Apparently, Bosnian Serbs have used pre-meditated, armed aggression in order to find a "final solution" of the problems of non-Serb population under their control. "Ethnic cleansing," the euphemism which Bosnian Serbs use (and the same term used by Hitler for his actions) for the atrocities they have been committing shows no signs of letting up any time soon.

However, no side in this war is innocent. A hand grenade was thrown by Muslim extremists into a Serbian-owned cafe, killing several customers. The following week, Muslim civilians were called out to "receive bread and ice cream." Instead, an artillery shell came crashing into their lines.

Shocking to the outsiders, yes. But to these people, who face bullets and bombs every day, who see their relatives and friends caught in the crossfire of warfare all too often, these things come as no surprise.

The Muslims have not only been mass-slaughtered, but they also have been largely uprooted from their homes. The Serbians order them to fly white flags outside of their windows, so the militia will know which homes to destroy. The Muslims flee from town to town, forever looking for places of refuge.

The Security Council of the United Nations formally established a War Crimes Tribunal to investigate the alleged incidence of War Crimes in the former Yugoslavia in May of 1993. The purpose was to find if leaders of the Serbian and Bosnian governments were committing breaches of the 1949 Geneva Convention -- more specifically, genocide and crimes against humanity.

Some of the actions, according to Madeleine K. Albright in her April 12, 1994 address at the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, have included "murder, torture, indiscriminate bombing, fire, dismemberment, rape and castration."

She continued by saying, "Half of Bosnia's population has been displaced. Five percent have been killed. Abuses have been massive, repeated, deliberate and gross. And no side is without guilt."

In her address, Fulbright stressed the importance of other nation's cooperation in the matter of finding suspects and evidence for the investigations.

"It will be very difficult to gain access to evidence," said Fulbright, "including mass grave sights, especially in areas under local Serb control. It will be difficult to gain custody over many of the accused."

I read a particularly powerful article which appeared in the The U.S. News and World Report written last December about the celebration of Christmas in Bosnia. An Protestant mother had the luck of finding a plastic fold-up tree in the back of the scant apartment which they had recently moved into. She and her daughters were decorating it with the paper scraps they could find in the remains of their town. This was Christmas.

The woman's 11-year-old daughter made a wish which was felt by not only the Protestants, but also by the Jews, Muslims and Catholics who populate the former Yugoslavia.

"All I wish for," the young girl said, "is for my family to all be together and safe on Christmas Day."

Perhaps, then, the question is not why we are discussing the possibility of our involvement in the Balkan crisis, but how we, as Americans, can take for granted many of the fortunes we have on a daily basis.

And taking fortune for granted seems to be something that we, as Americans, really need to learn about.

School gets new name

A newly enlarged school at the University has selected a new name.

The School of Communication Studies has been chosen as the name for the recently combined telecommunications, journalism and interpersonal communication departments.

The process of joining the three departments began in earnest last March when faculty unanimously voted in favor of the move. The merger will be completed later this year when interpersonal communication faculty leave offices in South Hall to join their colleagues in West Hall, according to John Makay, director of the school. Makay will continue as chair of interpersonal communication.

The new school is considerably larger than the former School of Mass Communication, Makay said. It offers two graduate degrees and three undergraduate degrees. Communication studies now has about 1000 undergraduates and 50 graduate students.

Makay praised the merger as "a more dynamic way to teach our students about communication in all areas. While we can separate ourselves academically, in the real world there is a strong, symbiotic relationship between journalism, telecommunication and interpersonal communication."

He noted that there is a trend toward joining these areas in universities across the country.

Fusion energy expert to speaking

"The potential of Fusion Energy" will be the subject of a guest lecture Wednesday at the University.

David Ciotti, an electronics technician at the Princeton Plasma Laboratory and adjunct faculty member at Trenton State College in New Jersey, will speak at 7:30 p.m. in 095 Overman Hall.

The Princeton Plasma Lab is a world leader in fusion research. Many, including Ciotti, say that recent breakthroughs in research show that fusion is the most promising energy source of the future.

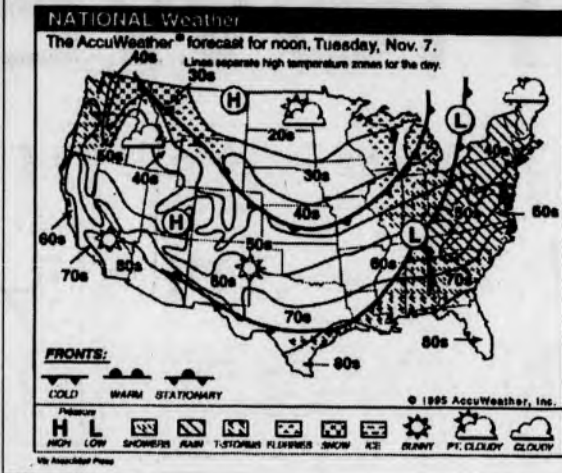

Ciotti will discuss the fusion process, its potential for power output and how insufficient funding continues to be the greatest impediment to development of this energy source.

He also is expected to forecast how long it will take to phase-in fusion to improve the current system of electric power generation.

His presentation, which is free and open to the public, is being sponsored by the University's Department of Physics and the Center for Environmental Programs.

In Brief

Nonviolent criminals may be housed in unlocked building

MARYSVILLE, Ohio - Union County thinks it has a way to save money and cut into its list of offenders waiting to serve jail time.

Sheriff John Overly has proposed housing some nonviolent criminals and suspects in an unlocked building. That could save the county thousands of dollars each year, he said.

Only inmates not considered a security risk would be eligible for the alternative sentencing. Inmates would have to agree to pay a daily bed fee, pay their own medical and dental costs, and submit to random drug and alcohol testing. They also would have to do their own laundry and housekeeping.

"I look at this as being somewhere between home arrest and jail," Overly said in a story Monday in The Columbus Dispatch.

He predicted the center, a county-owned former school building, could be open by early next year. It would need plumbing and kitchen renovations to meet state safety codes.

The plan is contingent on judges' support and willingness to sentence offenders to an unlocked jail.

Gunmen kill four in Boston restaurant

BOSTON - Gunmen opened fire today at a Charlestown restaurant, killing four people and wounding at least one.

Witnesses said two gunmen fired eight to 10 shots inside the building, the 99 Restaurant & Pub, at around 1:20 p.m. A plain-clothes police officer there eating lunch chased them outside, where they were arrested.

Boston Police spokesman Lt. Robert O'Toole said two people were in custody, but he would not comment on a possible motive.

He said four people were killed. Massachusetts General Hospital reported having one victim in critical condition from a gunshot wound near the heart.

A witness who spoke on condition of anonymity said she saw two men come inside the restaurant with guns, then heard shots and someone screaming that his brother had been shot.

She said she looked around and saw two people lying unmoving on the floor.

"I scooted out the door; I was petrified," she said.

"It was just frantic in there," said another diner. "People were hiding behind the bar, they were lying on the floor."

The 99 Restaurants are a small chain of casual eateries. Charlestown is a blue-collar neighborhood on the city's north side.

Captain Speed launches pumpkin 2,655 feet

LEWES, Del. - When it comes to chucking pumpkins, nobody does it better than Captain Speed.

Relying on nine years of practice and an air-pressured cannon, the leader of the Mellow Yellow team on Sunday launched a pumpkin more than 2,655 feet over a soy bean field - promptly smashing the gourd and a world record.

"I finally made it," said Speed, a.k.a. Harry Lackhove.

Delaware's Punkin' Chuckin' contest began 10 years ago as a friendly challenge among friends to see who could hurl leftover Halloween pumpkins the farthest.

The contest has evolved over the years into a serious competitive sport involving everything from slingshots and garage door springs to centrifugal force contraptions, cannons and compressed air.

More than 30,000 spectators paid $5 each to watch the weekend event.

Poe Ditch Music Festival--drugs, rain

The great Poe Ditch Music Festival is gone.

Police are breathing easier now, grateful more damage wasn't done.

Many fans walked out of the stadium with good memories. Others left in an ambulance.

Several persons were taken from the concert site at Doyt Perry Field to Wood County Hospital and one was taken to the Medical College of Ohio/Toledo.

One thing is certain. The festival was the first and last concert of such magnitude, according to President Hollis Moore.

In a prepared statement released yesterday, Dr. Moore said the "large scale rock concert experiment will not be repeated."

"It is obviously not possible to stage such an event without encouraging heavy drug usage. The University will not be put in that situation again," Moore said.

The concert crowd, estimated at between 33,000 and 40,000 people, began arriving as early as Friday. By Saturday campers were filling the parking lots at the Stadium. Sunday morning the roads were flooded with cars trying to make their way to the festival.

Many fans complained they could not hear the bands they came to listen to. Two acts, Golden Earring and Johnny Winter did not even play after rain interrupted the set. Winter was reportedly afraid of electric shock.

Some sources said amphetamines, barbiturates, marijuana, LSD, PCP, and other drugs were bought and sold freely at the concert.

Meanwhile on the outside, a man from Indiana had his El Camino pickup truck stocked full of Coors beer. The price? One dollar a can. He explained the cost was high because he had to drive to Kansas to get it.

Dr. Marvin Kumler, acting director of Karma. Said he and his 40 volunteers assisted the two doctors in running the first aid station.

He said about 300-350 people were treated, about half for drug related illnesses. Other afflictions were for sunburns, cut feet, and one broken ankle, Dr. Kumler said.

One person reportedly injected himself with chlorhydrate, a powerful sedative, Dr. Kumler said, while another fell on a bottle and severely cut muscles and tendons in his arm.

Wood County hospital treated and released about 35 people, a house supervisor said. An additional four people were held at the hospital overnight and released.

City safety director Howard Rutter said he has been to good concerts and to bad concerts. He added that Sunday's concert was not the best.

His complaints were with the concerts promoter, Ross Todd productions of Dayton. Rutter said the promoter was supposed to provide four ambulances and 150 security guards. He said he only saw about 25 security officers and no ambulances.

Lt. Galen Ash of the police division said his men collected "several dozen" bags of marijuana and some white tablets, probably LSD or PCP. He said liquor violations were widespread but police could not control them.

Dr. Jerome cancels classes

All classes are cancelled today President William Jerome yesterday reluctantly agreed to cancel classes following adoption by Faculty Senate of a similar resolution.

"It will be against the President's policy," he said. "But I will cancel classes."

The Senate proposal was passed at a meeting in the Student Services Building, attended by approximately 2,000 students. Rules were temporarily suspended, and the prepared agenda dispensed with.

Greatest opposition to the proposal came from the Faculty members teaching classes that only meet once a week.

Senators also passed a resolution demanding that President Jerome personally express to Governor James Rhodes a condemnation of the use of federal troops on college campuses.

The Senate had earlier defeated a motion that condemned the leadership of the National Guard in the recent disturbances.

Dr. Frank Miesel, chairman of the speech department then resubmitted the proposal for consideration.

The introduction stated that violence on the Kent campus was regrettable and asked for a condemnation of the killing of the students.

RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY DR. NEWMAN TO SEC:
"Be it resolved that the Faculty Senate request that BGSU be closed on Wednesday as a memorial to the students killed by National Guardsmen at Kent State University as a tangible act of protest against the irresponsible actions of President Richard Nixon in extending the war into Cambodia and continuing the war in Viet Nam."

The introduction to the bill was passed almost unanimously, although an amendment calling for condemnation of Rhodes was defeated.

The Senate also adopted a resolution asking Governor Rhodes to discontinue the use of National Guardsmen on college campuses until a thorough investigation of the use of deadly force at Kent is examined.

Also passed was a resolution supporting the principles of eight demands recently sent to President Jerome by the Black Student Union.

The resolution stated that the Senate was confident that President Jerome's response to the BSU will represent a clear increase in the commitment of the University to every need of minority and disadvantaged students.

John Scott, an instructor in the speech department, and BSU negotiator presented a point by point delineation of the BSU demands.

Demands for increased recruiting activities included admission of at least 500 black students for fall quarter 1971 with financial aid for each.

A request was made for the establishment of a University wide developmental skills program to be financed by the director of Student Development and the coordinator of Black Studies.

Included in the demand for coordination of Student Affairs activities with the coordinator of Black Studies was a request for the development of a section of the library for literature directly related to Black Studies.

Another demand was that three members of the Black Student Union be included on a committee to investigate alleged discrimination on campus housing and in athletics.

Dr. Archie Jones, professor of English and History, then introduced a resolution stating that the BSU proposals were reasonable and achievable.

Both the motion and the amendment were passed.

President Jerome responded to 15 student demands presented to him earlier in the day by saying that most of the ideas were already under consideration by various committees.

Lawsuit fights abortion bill

Heather Cvengros
The BG News

Legislation calls to ban a type of late-term abortion could prohibit a constitutional right, according to some University faculty and staff.

According to The Associated Press, two women's health care providers filed a lawsuit challenging legislation that will ban a specific type of late-term abortion known as "brain suction" in Ohio.

The House of Representatives approved the bill on Nov. 4. If approved by the Senate and President, it will outlaw the dilation and extraction procedure. During the procedure, the skull of the fetus is collapsed and the brain is removed.

Pro-choice advocates say dilation and extraction is one of the safest methods of ending late-term pregnancies.

The legislation prohibits any abortion after 24 weeks of pregnancy except to protect the health of the mother. It also requires testing to determine whether the fetus could survive outside the womb if the procedure is going to be done after 22 weeks.

According to the lawsuit, the bill is invalid because it places a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion.

Some professors, staff disagree with legislation

The women also charge that the "vague," inconsistent and confusing language makes the bill unconstitutional.

Many University faculty and staff members said legislators have no right to limit the choices of women, which is unconstitutional.

Kathy Farber, associate professor of EDFI and women's studies, said people have to trust one another enough to make their own decisions.

"It becomes a difficult issue when a variety of perspectives are withheld from us and we get crowded information from a political, persuasive viewpoint," Farber said.

Jeannie Ludlow, faculty adviser for Womyn for Womyn, said if legislation bans the dilation and extraction procedure, lawmakers are banning a constitutional right.

"The right to choose is a personal choice," Ludlow said. "Anything that prohibits this right is considered unconstitutional."

Ludlow also said one limitation opens doors for further limitation.

"Some people don't approve of abortion, but they still have one - some may not even have a choice," she said.

Ludlow said many young women believe the fight has been fought and women don't have to worry anymore.

"Actually, people worry a lot because more limitations are added on all the time," she said.

Ludlow said limitations, such as needing a parent's consent, result in illegal abortions, which can result in death.

"I don't think we've won. We have to continue to fight," she said. "It's a personal choice."

Ludlow also said she would like to see more women involved in decision making at the political level.

"More women need to vote and verbalize that it is wrong for legislation to put limitations on choices," she said. "The choice is a personal choice, not a political choice."

Richard Anderson, assistant professor of psychology, said a decision needs to be made about whether abortion is a constitutional right.

"If it is, a burden would be put on those who want to take away the right," Anderson said. "They need to prove that the bill doesn't violate a woman's right - if abortion is not a constitutional right than the issue is different."

Anderson said he believes the decision to abort is between the woman and God.

"The general principles of the constitution support a woman's right to choose," he said. "It's nobody's business besides the woman and God."

Donald Boren, professor of legal studies, said courts use a standard called The Undue Burden Test in determining abortion issues.

The Undue Burden Test, established in 1991, looks at whether or not a state's regulation places an undue burden on the woman's choice to have an abortion.

The test looks at other alternatives, whether they're safe, effective and more expensive.

Boren said he is concerned with Congress dictating medical procedures and predicts that the Supreme Court will not hear this case.

"I think the choice is between the patient and the physician," Boren said. "Congress shouldn't dictate whether a medical procedure should be performed or not."

Calendar may peak students' science sense

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Karen Hopkin has been around scientists for most of her life.

And despite what you may think, the biochemist said most of them are fairly attractive people.

To help prove her point, Hopkin created the "Studmuffins of Science" calendar, a glossy collection of 12 male scientists from universities across the nation who hardly fit into the "taped-glasses, pocket-protector" stereotype.

In the calendar, the hunky scientists are pictured outside their classrooms and laboratories, usually in poses that emphasize physical exercise over exercising the mind.

"I guess it's a new way to look at scientists," Hopkin said. "It's a way for people to see science attracts all kinds of people."

Scientists featured in the calendar said they support the calendar's cause. The idea behind "Studmuffins" is to encourage young students to consider a career in science.

"I was flattered to be considered," said Brian Scottoline, a Stanford chemist and the calendar's "Dr. January." "It was something I never expected."

During working hours, Scottoline studies viral integrases in chromosomes. The calendar's profile of Scottoline lists his hobbies - hiking and swimming - alongside his favorite subatomic particle - the Higgs bosons. Still, Scottoline says he and his scientific colleagues are not different from any other people.

"We're pretty normal," Scottoline said. He's pictured pulling himself out of a pool for the calendar's first month. "We swim and golf and play basketball just like everyone else."

Hopkin said she hopes the calendar reinforces a young person's decision to explore science as a career option.

Level of blood alcohol deemed high in death

Joe Boyle
The BG News

A University senior who was struck and killed by a train last Tuesday had an "abnormal" blood alcohol level, according to a Wood County coroner's report.

Jessica Mawson's cause of death was ruled accidental by Coroner Douglas Hess.

Bowling Green Police Major Tom Votava said Mawson's blood alcohol level was .28 -- nearly three times the limit considered "legally intoxicated."

"I hope the people who were with her feel the revelry was worth the price," Votava said.

Lt. Tom Brokamp, who was in charge of the police investigation of the accident, confirmed the accidental nature of the death.

"It seemed she, along with two other people, was trying to beat the train. The first two people she didn't know," Brokamp said. A theory proposed by the victim's father that her shoes may have been caught in the tracks, causing her to get hit, is faulty, according to Brokamp.

"She was carrying her shoes because she had sprained her ankle earlier in the evening," he said.

Dr. Hess' office refused to comment on her blood alcohol level of the victim, claiming it was "not relevant." The doctor could not be reached for comment.

Water conditions debated

Discussion group aims to inform residents of dangers

Jim Barker
The BG News

Local residents and University students gathered in a basement meeting room at the United Christian Fellowship center Monday night to discuss public water conditions and brainstorm for ways to inform the general public of the matter.

The meeting was attended by both Bowling Green Water Treatment Plant director Norm Langenderfer and Bowling Green Public Utilities director Daryl Stockburger, who answered residents' questions and outlined options for the improvement of the plant.

The discussion group was led by Bowling Green resident Beatriz Maya, who outlined the group's goals. According to Maya, the group's foremost goal is to inform local residents on the possible dangers of drinking city tap water.

Langenderfer, who fielded most of the questions, said pesticide levels in Bowling Green drinking water may not necessarily be harmful.

"The human body is made to tolerate certain small levels of toxic substances," Langenderfer said. "You know, three tablespoons of salt can kill you. But we need some salt to survive."

Langenderfer also said the nano-filtration system currently being piloted by the Treatment Plant can remove the majority of organic and inorganic pollutants, but will be very expensive.

Stockburger concurred with Langenderfer's assessment.

"It removes between 80 and 95 percent of most organics," Stockburger said. "The question is, do the people want to pay the price?"

And the price tag for a permanent nano-filtration system could be very high indeed. According to Langenderfer, the Treatment Plant estimates an increase in water rates anywhere from 50 to 100 percent.

The residents at the discussion group did not seem to mind the idea of increased rates.

Environmental Health professor Gary Silverman offered his opinions concerning the necessity of inorganic herbicides in agricultural work or at home.

"I like having little yellow flowers on my lawn," Silverman said. "But my neighbors probably wouldn't agree with me on that."

"My question is whether we really need to use herbicides to kill weeds," he said.

oversee the concrete since it is a federally funded project."

One day of travel on Thurstin Avenue will be given to residents while North College Drive is being paved, he said.

Blair said one more coating of asphalt needs to be installed on the road.

In other business, the issue was brought up that Conrail has petitioned three different proposals for the city to consider concerning the closing of three railroad crossings.

The Pike Street, Derby Street and either Reed Street or Ridge Street railroad crossings are being considered to close.

According to City Attorney Michael Marsh, the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio will hold a meeting in Bowling Green to discuss the proposals.

"The Pike and Derby crossings do not meet the standards to stay open," Marsh said.

In addition, the Frazee railroad crossing improvements have not been scheduled yet.

A public hearing is scheduled for Monday, Nov. 13 at 6:30 to continue discussion concerning the railroad crossings.

Cleveland betrayed

Ten years ago, as a 10-year-old boy growing up in Northwest Ohio, I fell in love with the Cleveland Browns.

They were "my team." Sure, I'm also a Cincinnati Reds fan, and an Ohio State fan, and now a Bowling Green fan.

But it was always my beloved Browns, first and foremost.

I admit crying that January day in 1987 when John Elway drove the Broncos to an AFC Championship win in Cleveland. The tears flowed again a year later when Earnest Byner fumbled away a chance at a miracle come-from-behind win in Denver in another title game.

The pain has run deep for many years, and not just for me but for the millions of die-hard Browns fans in Northern Ohio and across the country. Always, though, there was the hope that some day the Browns would make that pain worthwhile with the magical season that only Indians fans could think of.

But my feelings Monday, as Cleveland's move to Baltimore became a painful reality, surpassed pain. As one fan said on television Sunday, the knife was squarely in our backs, and it was twisting something fierce.

I sat in my room Monday and watched the Baltimore people glowing over their "acquisition." There were smiles all around, from the Maryland governor to the head of the Maryland Stadium Authority, all the way down to our villain, one "Baltimore" Browns owner Art Modell.

You see, it is Art's signature on that contract that the Maryland governor waived for the cheering masses. It was Art's signature that robbed me of "my team."

I felt cheated, betrayed, hurt, disgusted ... sold out by a man, Art Modell, and an entity, the NFL, who epitomize professional sports today in the quest for the ever-elusive luxury box dollar.

In the end, Cleveland may have sold itself out of this deal. They have funneled hundreds of millions of dollars on a new field for the Indians, a new arena for the Cavaliers and on their Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and at the same time have neglected the Browns and the 64-year-old Municipal Stadium.

Modell finally got fed up with waiting. Even a proposed stadium improvement levy on the ballot today in Cleveland won't stop Art from heading for the greener pastures.

And so Cleveland and its legion of fans are left at the altar, similar to the situation that faced Baltimore in the early '80s when the Colts bolted. The Browns, like so many others in pro sports today, bolted for the cuter girl with the rich father.

This clinches my disdain for pro athletics. Baseball is in the toilet, the NBA is filled with nothing more than a bunch of cry babies, and now football is offering the ultimate slap in the face.

So long, Browns. So long, Art. Thanks ...
For nothing.

Baltimore welcomes Modell

Browns owner signs pact to move the team for 1996 season

David Ginsburg
The Associated Press

BALTIMORE -- In a deal involving two of the most storied cities in NFL history, the Browns said Monday they would abandon Cleveland and move to Baltimore next season.

It marked the third time in a year that an NFL franchise moved to a city where pro football had failed once before.

And although the words "Baltimore Browns" stirred deep more. The financial plan offered by Maryland Stadium Authority chief John Moag included: a $200 million stadium to be built by the state, up to $75 million in money for moving expenses and state-paid improvements to Baltimore's Memorial Stadium, where the Browns will play their first two seasons.

The news conference was held in the parking lot of what will be the site of a 70,000-seat stadium next to the Orioles' Camden Yards ballpark. It took place with waved the contract during Monday's news conference.

"I'm not exactly a stranger to the legacy of the Baltimore Colts. I was in the league when they dominated the scene," Modell said, referring to the nucleus of a team that won world championships in 1958 and 1959.

The Browns have also had their successes, winning four NFL championships, the last coming in 1964 when they defeated the emotions in both towns, team owner Art Modell said it came down to one thing -- money.

"This has been a very, very tough road for my family and me," said Modell, who along with Gov. Parris Glendening announced the move. "I leave my heart and part of my soul in Cleveland. But frankly, it came down to a simple proposition: I had no choice."

Modell ended 45 years of NFL tradition in Cleveland by signing a 30-year lease to play in Baltiofficials cheering in the sunshine -- a stark contrast to the March 1984 departure of the Colts. On that snowy night, moving vans clandestinely pulled up to the Colts' training camp in suburban Baltimore and carried the team's equipment away to Indianapolis.

Baltimore's quest for another NFL team ended 10 days ago when Modell and Glendening reached an agreement aboard a private jet at Baltimore-Washington International Airport. Glendening triumphantly

Cleveland plans counterattack

Thomas J. Sheeran
The Associated Press

CLEVELAND -- The Cleveland Browns Monday formally declared their intention to move to Baltimore, minutes after a county judge left open the door for them to reveal their plans.

"Baltimore wants its team to be the best team in the NFL, and has the community resources to allow that level of competitiveness," team owner Art Modell said in a news release. "It is a great city with a great football tradition."

"Cleveland is also a great city," he said. "It has been my home and my heart will always carry the sadness of leaving our fans here."

Earlier, Cuyahoga County Common Pleas Judge Kenneth Callahan had granted Cleveland's request for a temporary order blocking the team from leaving town before a Nov. 20 hearing.

But Callahan scratched out sections of a draft of the order that would have prevented the Browns from taking any action to transfer the team to another location or seeking National Football League approval of the move.

In announcing the order, Callahan said it did not affect Modell's First Amendment right of free speech, apparently meaning the Browns owner was free to announce anything he liked -- he just can't do much about it yet.

There had been no indication the team planned to leave before the end of the 1995 season; the team's last regular-season home game is Dec. 17, against the Cincinnati Bengals.

Modell said in his release he had struggled to reach agreement with Cleveland.

"I have been asking civic leaders for help for six years, but after almost two years of intense discussions the help was not available," Modell said.

Previously, city officials have expressed frustration with Modell, who unilaterally stopped negotiations at the start of this season.

Modell, Maryland Gov. Parris Glendening and Maryland Stadium Authority head John Moag were expected to discuss the move at a midday news conference in Baltimore.

Baltimore has fought desperately for a National Football League franchise since the Colts left in 1984.

Cleveland Mayor Michael R. White has vowed to do everything he could to thwart the move. White said during the weekend that he intended to make appeals to Modell and the NFL his first lines of attack, with legal action held as a last defense.

But in a letter sent to NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue by facsimile this morning, White said attorneys had advised suing now to preserve the city's legal rights down the road.

"We fully intend to pursue those opportunities which our city has to be heard in the unfolding of the ordinary course of the National Football League process in these situations," White wrote.

Moscow holds off Falcons, 92-88

Steve Wildman
The BG News

Jon Rasbach/The BG News

Falcons center Jacki Raterman shoots a jumper over Russian forward Olga Yakovenko (9) in Monday night's exhibition loss to Rossiyanika-Moscow, 92-88 at Anderson Arena.

With 8.1 seconds left the Bowling Green Falcons came within three points of the Rossiyanika-Moscow team. But with time running out the Moscow team was able to hold on for 92-88 win.

This exhibition game was the first test for the Falcons to this year. Head coach Jaci Clark thinks the Falcons scored a passing grade.

"Our main concern was our defensive transition. Moscow runs the floor well and they came at us good, but we handled it well," Clark said.

This game was crucial opener for the freshman on Bowling Green's squad.

"This [Moscow] gives our freshmen something to compare to for our next game. They made adjustments according to the defensive principles that we wanted to apply for this game," Clark said.

Even with a loss the Falcons did see ample scoring. Ten of the twelve players who suited up for the game scored.

Sophomore Sara Puthoff led Bowling Green in scoring with 22 points. Puthoff also sunk three three-pointers in the game.

Charlotta Jones led the team in rebounding with 12 and put up 17 points for the Falcons. Jones was pivotal in Bowling Green's surge at the end of the game.

"It took Charlotta a while to find her shot, but near the end, she came through for us," Clark said.

Chrissy Billiter came out in her Bowling Green debut scored 16 points including sinking three-pointers.

"She came out strong in the first half and I felt that her concentration was good," Clark said.

The problem in Bowling Green's game had was the slow start coming out of half-time. Moscow was able to jump ahead of the Falcons.

"We didn't get out of the locker room in time [Bowling Green only had 1:09 to shoot around], and we didn't have enough time to warm up. I think it had something to do with our slow second-half start and I take the blame for that," Clark said.

"We handled the end of the game well. We took to them strong and made it close."

Jaci Clark

BG women's head basketball coach

The Falcons were able to keep the game close but were unable to shut down Moscow's top player Elena Nikipolskaia. Nikipolskaia was dominant with 34 points, two blocks, seven boards, and six steals.

Bowling Green did see some good scoring from junior center Michelle Terry and sophomore forward Bridget Andrews. Terry came away from the game with 11 points and Andrews finished the contest with 10 points.

"We handled the end of the game well. We took it to them strong and made it close. It's good to give yourself a chance at the end of the game," Clark said.

League shocked by Browns move

Chuck Melvin
The Associated Press

BEREA, Ohio -- Their home-field advantage gone, the Cleveland Browns understand they could be a very lonely team for the balance of 1995.

"We're going to be out there on our own," cornerback Antonio Langham said Monday after Art Modell announced he would move the franchise to Baltimore next season. "We've got three games left here, but we probably won't have the support we'd like to have. It's going to be hard for them to put their hearts in it and cheer for us."

The Browns lost to Houston 37-10 Sunday before a somber Cleveland Stadium crowd that suspected the announcement was coming. Now that it's official, the Browns are counting on nothing from their fans, who have typically been among the rowdiest in the league.

There were nearly 8,000 no-shows for the Houston game.

"It's a tough situation, but we've still got some games left," running back Lorenzo White said. "You can't be that shocked if you're a player, because there are a lot of things that go on that you don't understand. I feel sorry for the fans, but as players, we can't worry about that."

The players insisted they haven't given up on the season, in spite of their 4-5 record and the prospect of playing before hostile crowds for all of their remaining seven games.

"It would be great to go out and win our division, get to the playoffs and win the Super Bowl," Vinny Testaverde said. "At least we'd go out with a bang, and everybody would enjoy that, you know."

Testaverde, however, is in almost as helpless a situation as the fans who felt blindsided by Monday's announcement. He was demoted two weeks ago and replaced at starting quarterback by rookie Eric Zeier.

"I thought I had seen everything, but this is a new one," Testaverde said. "We were talking about contending for the Super Bowl coming into this season, and that's still our goal. We've gone through some tough times, and this makes it harder because now this is what everybody is talking about. It is hard not to let it be a distraction."

Running back Leroy Hoard, a second-round draft pick in 1990, said he will have a hard time identifying the Browns with any city other than Cleveland.

"It's weird. I mean, ever since I started watching football it's been the Cleveland Browns," Hoard said. "I'm not sure I'll be able to fix my mouth to say anything other than Cleveland Browns. But the fact remains that I have to play for the Browns wherever they may be."

Hoard also said it was apparent the team could not have continued playing at Cleveland Stadium in its current condition. Voters in Browns wide receiver Michael Bates (83) kneels dejectedly after Cleveland's 37-10 loss at home to the Houston Oilers.

Cuyahoga County were to vote Tuesday on an extension of a tax on alcohol and cigarettes that would help pay for a renovation of the stadium.

"Ever since I've been here, they've been talking about a new stadium," Hoard said. "You've been in the locker rooms. You've seen the field. It really is not a place to play professional football. It really was time to move on with the times."

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH -- The Cleveland Browns' impending move to Baltimore threatens to diminish one of the NFL's biggest rivalry: Pittsburgh vs. Cleveland.

"I'm disappointed. The Browns have the second-best fans in football, and it was the best rivalry in football," Steelers president Dan Rooney said. "It meant a lot to us."

Browns-Steelers games, such as the upcoming one Monday at Three Rivers Stadium, were big events even when the two weren't big winners. Nearly every Browns-Steelers game has sold out since the late 1950s.

"In the 1960s, we even called it 'The Game.' When you play this game, it's such a meaningful game. That's why home-field advantage means so much in this game because of that rivalry, the fans get so intense."

The Steelers don't practice on Mondays, so few were around Three Rivers Stadium when the Browns' move was confirmed. A few coaches and staff members watched the announcement on television, and most didn't seem to believe what they were hearing.

Rooney, one of Modell's closest friends in the league, won't predict if NFL owners will block the deal by citing a lack of compliance with guidelines covering franchise moves.

"There are a number of [NFL] owners concerned about this," Rooney said. "It's a very difficult, close situation."

Colts 27-0.

"I know what you went through 11 years ago," he told the gathering, "because that's what's happening now in Cleveland and I am deeply, deeply sorry from the bottom of my heart."

On Sunday, Modell missed his first Browns home game in 35 years. He and his football team have long been an integral part of the city, and his relationship with Cleveland extended well beyond the ownership of the NFL club.

Piniella named top AL manager

Ronald Blum
The Associated Press

NEW YORK -- Lou Piniella had one startling season with the Seattle Mariners. He didn't think the American League Manager of the Year award would be part of it.

"I thought I would get some consideration, but at the same time it was surprising when I was called," Piniella said Monday. "I'm proud of this, I really am. It's nice to be recognized. I never thought it would feel this way."

In a close race, Piniella finished with 86 points, 12 ahead of Boston Red Sox manager Kevin Kennedy and 15 ahead of Cleveland Indians manager Mike Hargrove.

The Mariners called Piniella at his Tampa, Fla., home on Monday morning and asked him to be available in case he won.

"I'll be available, but I don't know what my chances are," he remembered saying.

Piniella was picked first on nine of 28 ballots cast by voters from the Baseball Writers Association of America. Piniella received 12 second-place votes and five thirds in the balloting, conducted on a 5-3-1 basis.

Kennedy, who led the Red Sox to the AL East title, got 11 first-place votes, five seconds and four thirds. Hargrove had eight firsts, eight seconds and seven thirds after leading the Indians to a first-place finish for the first time since 1954.

"This is much more meaningful for me than things I accomplished as a player because I'm more responsible, putting things together and being in charge," Piniella said.

Piniella, 52, managed the New York Yankees and Cincinnati Reds before taking over the Mariners in 1993. In 1990, he led the Reds to the World Series title.

Seattle trailed California by 13 games on Aug. 2, then rallied and won the AL West by defeating the Angels in a one-game playoff.

The BBWAA panel -- two writers from each AL city -- voted before the start of the playoffs. The Mariners overcame a 2-0 deficit to beat the New York Yankees in the best-of-5 first round, then lost to the Indians in six games in the league championship series.

"It's an organization award as far as I'm concerned," Piniella said. For him, the best part of the season was "the way the city responded to the baseball team."

"There were doubts Seattle was a baseball city," Piniella said. "There were doubts if the organization put a good team on the field whether the town would rally around it."

Piniella, 52, was voted AL Rookie of the Year by the BBWAA in 1969. He has a 689-633 in nine seasons as a major league manager. At 210-209, he is the only Mariners manager ever with a record over .500.

Former Yankee manager Buck Showalter, who won the award in 1994, finished fourth with eight points after taking New York to the playoffs as a wild-card team. He left the team two weeks ago and is a candidate for the vacant manager's jobs in Detroit and Oakland and with expansion Arizona.

California manager Marcel Lachemann was fifth with five points, followed by Phil Garner of Milwaukee (4), Bob Boone of Kansas City (3) and Johnny Oates of Texas (1).

Whalers hire 28-year old coach

Pat Eaton-Robb
The Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. -- Paul Holmgren was fired Monday as coach of the Hartford Whalers, who have lost six of their last eight games and missed the playoffs the last three years.

He was replaced by Paul Maurice, a former coach of the Detroit Junior Red Wings who at 28 becomes the NHL's youngest coach.

General manager Jim Rutherford, who said the players bear some of the responsibility for the firing, cited a "lack of production" in announcing the dismissal.

Rutherford informed Holmgren of his decision after taking a two-hour lunch to think about it. He said Holmgren took the news very hard.

Holmgren could not be immediately reached for comment.

"Paul has done a lot of good things for this organization and has rebounded from adversity in the past and I know he will do this in the future," Rutherford said.

Holmgren has coached the Whalers since 1992 with the exception of a sixth-month period between November 1993 and June 1994, when he was the team's general manager.

The Whalers began the year with four straight wins, but went 1-6-1 after that, including a 6-1 loss Sunday to the Philadelphia Flyers. Holmgren was 54-93-14 as coach of the Whalers.

"We felt it was important to have new ideas and some new blood into this organization,"

Rutherford said.

Maurice joined the Whalers in June as an assistant coach after coaching the Detroit Junior Red Wings the past two seasons. He is about the same age as many of the Whalers players.

"I don't and I never really have looked at my age as a problem for me ... I've had excellent experience in what I've had," said Maurice, who makes his debut Tuesday night against San Jose. "Would I be more ready when I'm 40? Possibly, but not necessarily."

Maurice said his priority is to install a simple system, emphasizing defense. He said being liked by the players is secondary.

"I don't plan on having too much time to spend, or desire to spend, that time winning the players over as friends," he said.

Rutherford said he never considered the more experienced coaches available, including recently fired Canadiens coach Jacques Demers, saying he didn't want a coach with "baggage."

"Those experienced coaches are not still working. For whatever reason, they were not able to keep their jobs," Rutherford said.

Holmgren came to the Whalers in 1992 after four seasons as coach in Philadelphia. He never had a winning season as an NHL coach. He played in the NHL for 10 years with the Flyers and Minnesota North Stars. His total record with Philadelphia and Hartford is 161-219-45.

Gators fall in polls despite win

Paul Newberry
The Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Fla. -- Florida is 8-0 for only the second time in school history and staring straight at a Fiesta Bowl showdown against top-ranked Nebraska.

After a shuffle in the polls this week, however, there's no guarantee that the Gators will capture the national championship -- even if they win the rest of their games.

Ohio State jumped ahead of Florida in The Associated Press media poll and the CNN-USA Today coaches survey, taking over the No. 2 spot after Florida State was upset by Virginia last Thursday night. The Gators remained No. 3.

If the top three teams win their remaining games, Ohio State would head to the Rose Bowl while Florida would face Nebraska in the Fiesta. Then it might come down to the pollsters, with Florida facing the possibility of having a perfect record and no title, just as Penn State was last season.

"I watched Joe Paterno go 12-0 and break about all the offensive records up there and not win the national championship," Florida coach Steve Spurrier said Sunday. "I don't know how a coach can say, 'If we win all our games, fellows, we'll be the national champions.' That's not true necessarily."

Spurrier insists he isn't worried about the polls, especially when the Gators likely still have five games left to play. They would clinch the Southeastern Conference Eastern Division with a victory at South Carolina on Saturday and be in position for their third consecutive league title.

"Our goals are to win the Eastern Division and try to win the SEC for the third year in a row," Spurrier said. "I don't worry about voting or scheduling, who does this or who does that. That's out of our hands."

It's highly probable the Gators would go back ahead of Ohio State in the rankings if both teams keep winning. The Buckeyes have only two games remaining before the expected trip to the Rose Bowl, while Florida still has three regular-season games, including the season finale against Florida State, now ranked No. 6.

Then there's the expected trip to the SEC championship game in Atlanta against No. 15 Arkansas, a nationally televised opportunity to make points with the voters after most other teams have completed their seasons.

The (Baltimore) Sun reported today that the move was a done deal and that a lease had been signed 10 days ago. And, in an interview with Baltimore television station WMAR, Moag said the city had an "absolutely" solid deal with an NFL team, though he refused to identify that team as the Browns.

The Sun, citing unidentified sources, reported that the deal included a 30-year lease on a new stadium next to Oriole Park at Camden Yards and provisions for the sale of seat licenses to raise up to $80 million to pay for the Browns move.

The deal calls for the Browns to play at Memorial Stadium for the 1996 and 1997 seasons while the new stadium is built and does not include any attendance guarantees or upfront money, The Sun reported.

On Tuesday, Cuyahoga County votes to extend for an extra 10 years a countywide "sin tax" that would provide $175 million for a renovation of Cleveland Stadium. Modell has indicated passage of the extension would probably not affect his decision.

Under NFL bylaws, a team's move must be approved by two-thirds of the owners. White has said he will send letters to all the owners, asking them to reject the proposed move.

Cleveland officials, including White, plan to argue against any possible Browns move during the NFL owners' meeting Tuesday in Grapevine, Texas.

Some of the owners won't need to be persuaded.
